Background
With the steady introduction of more treatment options and biotechnologies, an increasing number and range of ethical challenges in health care are emerging. This conference is designed to help professionals meet these challenges through their work as clinicians, members of ethics committees or ethics consult teams, and administrators.

Purpose
• Provide up-to-date information in healthcare ethics relevant to clinical practice.
• Provide approaches to ethical reasoning that clarify ethical problems.
• Facilitate professional discussion of ethical challenges and decision making in healthcare.
• Encourage professional networking for ongoing dialogue, support, and collaboration.

Approach
• Three sessions (each 1.5 hours) covering three different topics in clinical ethics.
  o Each session provides a lecture, small group case-based discussions, and a large group Q&A wrap-up.
• At the end of the day, a 1-hour keynote lecture followed by 30 minutes of discussion/Q&A.
• Time and opportunity for dialogue and networking.

Objectives
SESSION ONE
• Develop an understanding of the term moral distress and learn how varying definitions reflect a spectrum of professional distress.
• Define how moral distress has been measured and quantified.
• Recognize unique end-of-life circumstances that can lead to moral distress.
• Describe strategies and skills that may mitigate or prevent the development of moral distress.

SESSION TWO
• Analyze the ethical principles and core challenges of incorporating adolescent assent in clinical decision making.
• Discuss the ethical and legal implications of caring for adolescent patients who have been deemed mature minors.
• Identify the ethical tensions between providers, patients, and families that may arise when trying to respect the confidentiality of adolescents.

SESSION THREE
• Characterize the moral tension between the healthcare needs of individuals and the economic interests of populations.
• Determine the importance of financial cost information as part of the process of informed consent and shared decision making.
• Describe how the principles of beneficence, justice, and utility help determine whether healthcare costs should be discussed with patients.
• Apply a concept of role-fidelity to clarify the clinician’s responsibility for discussing healthcare costs with patients.

SESSION FOUR – Keynote Presentation
• Identify the criteria for assessing surgical progress.
• Enumerate the challenges of adequate informed consent for innovative procedures.
